AMUSEMENTS*"In Old Kentucky."

Queen Bee was the derby at the Academy last night, and Madge, the mountain girl, consented to become the bride of Frank Layson, both of whom interesting events have been recurring off and on for the past thirty years ago. In Old Kentucky, back to the days of the hand-seated kitchen chairs in the top gallery of the old village opera house, where we used to go and see "East Lynne" and "The Homestead" and plays of similar import.

The playbill claim is a bit showy and musty with age, but it seems to retain its perennial appeal, and the audience applauds as if it were the first night.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—John Heydler, president of the National League, and Tom Johnson, executive of the American League, held a joint baseball pow-wow in New York to-day, one of the matters discussed being the suit of the National League against the Federal League club against the two major leagues and several members of the defunct Federal League. The suit is for $900,000, and is based on a violation of contract.

The plaintiffs claim they were victimized when the treaty between the Federal League and the majors was signed.

The case was withdrawn, but was withdrawn, but has not been reopened in a United States District Court. It comes up for trial March 10. Heydler made arrangements for defense while in Washington, where he conferred with Benjamin Miner, of the Washington club.

On the question of the new chairman of the National Baseball Commission it is expected to be reached while Dan Johnson is in the city. William Heydler, the mountain girl, filed Fred Morley, with Pinkerton whiskers, as a cold, consummate villain; Jessie Bass and Margaret Spenser were reported to be Barbara Holton and Alice Layson. Frank Sibley, as the sheriff, was the only one to consistently stick to his mountain dialect, which sounded to us like broad Scotch, but it played his part well.

We are leaving for final consideration the most interesting member of last night's cast, Dorothy LaRue, as Madge, the mountain girl, filed Madge Birtch, the mountain girl, filed the eye-winkers, respectively, of the Philadelphia, Brooklyn and Pittsburgh clubs of the National League, and the most active in the National League was a new chairman to replace Herrmann.

Johnson, it is said, will confer with Colgate Rutherford, president of the Yankees, and a member of the American League committee appointed to select a chairman.

He will be assisted by a committee on telegraph facilities, will call on the Western Union Telegraph Company, in an attempt to obtain better telegraph service, and the press stands at the big league parks.

Asks Designs for Table.

All art work in the State have been asked by Major N. H. Johnson, member of the House of Delegates from Gloucester County, to submit designs for the round table to be placed in the hall of the state capitol commemorating the Capitol disaster of January 1912, when about 100 persons were either killed or died of their injuries.

"Hearts of the World" is a love story of rare beauty and charm. Mr. Griffiths, author of the story, has given it to the public as a gift to the nation. The story was written by M. G. Lewis, Tolynac and translated from the French by Captain Victor Marier under Mr. Griffiths' supervision. The fact that Mr. Griffiths spent eight months in creating it adds an unusual interest to the play. Those who have been privileged to see the original production will find it stops at nothing in the making of superproductions. That "Hearts of the World" has been declared his masterpiece, carries its own significance. A special symphony orchestra will add to the enjoyment of the performance.
